

LINERS CRASH IN FOG OFF HOOK, SMASHING HOLES IN THEIR HULLS

In the dense fog that smothered the coast this morning, two steamers crept into the Bay with gaping holes in their hulls. They were the San Giovanni of the Paire Line and the Grekland, a Swedish vessel, which shortly before midnight last night had crashed together in the fog beyond the Scottish Lightship. Both vessels came back to port under their own power.

The Grekland, bound for Kirkwall, Scotland, and the San Giovanni for Genoa, left port about the same time. Without warning the two steamers came together, the bow of the Italian steamer tearing a big hole in the port quarter of the Grekland, just above the water line. The San Giovanni's bows were badly crushed, and Capt. Rizzo immediately sent out calls for aid. Among the vessels that responded were the coast guard cutter Mink, the Falmes liner Roma and the British freighter Portuguese Prince. As neither of the colliding steamers had been sufficiently damaged to endanger their commanders' decision to return to port without aid.

The rescuing vessels, however, stood by until the two were near to Sandy Hook. The San Giovanni was sent to a dry dock and the Grekland anchored off the Brooklyn shore. Neither vessel carried passengers.
